PREFACE

THE SURVEY GAZETTEER OF THE BRITISH ISLES aims, as its name implies, at being a Survey of British Topography, a complete index of all places of importance or interest in the country, a descriptive and statistical summary of the geographical features of Great Britain and Ireland. The present work is based on the 96 volumes containing the Census of 1901, together with the 696 sheets of the one-inch Ordnance Survey of the United Kingdom. It also incorporates the substance of all the principal works on British Topography, Statistics, and Commerce.

The plan of the Survey Gazetteer is essentially the same as the Gazetteer of the British Isles, edited by my late father about eighteen years ago, but since that time great changes have occurred which now render that work more or less obsolete. The authorities which we then used are now superseded. The population of the country has increased by more than seven millions. Trade and industries have greatly developed, railways and roads have extended, towns and villages have grown or decreased, while new towns and villages, harbours and docks, have sprung into existence. There are also hundreds of new railway stations, new post offices, new mansion houses, and many other new features, all of which have to be included in such a work of reference. It will thus be seen that the Survey Gazetteer is really a new work although on the same lines as its predecessor.

To any one consulting a gazetteer, the two questions to be answered about any place are, first, "Where is it?" and second, "What about it?" To answer these questions exactly, concisely, and yet with sufficient definite detail, is the aim of the present work. Every article has been compressed into the smallest space consistent with clearness, while the use of familiar abbreviations and the grouping of places of the same name under one heading has brought the work into a compact and convenient form.

Comparative statistics dealing with general trade, shipping, imports and exports, railways, agriculture, parliamentary representation, weather, &c., have been tabulated in an Appendix. In this form they will be found useful for comparison and easy reference.

The series of maps, which has been specially prepared for the work, illustrates the most interesting features of its various geographical aspects—physical, commercial, demographical and political. Plans of the chief towns, revised to date, have also been added for reference.

In conclusion we would add that although every care has been taken to avoid errors and omissions, yet, in such a work, covering a wide field and involving a great multiplicity of facts, it is most difficult to ensure perfect accuracy. Changes are constantly taking place throughout the country, and as no systematic record of such changes is available, one has to compile information from many and varied authorities of unequal value. It is however hoped that careful revision has eliminated all serious errors and omissions, but if any should be detected, the editor will be glad to know of them that they may be rectified in future editions.

EXPLANATION OF TERMS.

Barony.—A petty sessional division of Irish counties; the term in Britain applies to the estates of Barons.

Borough.—A town (of England, Wales, or Ireland) sending members to Parliament, or which is governed by municipal charter. A County Borough is any borough instituted by the Local Govt. Act, 1888, which either has a population of not less than 50,000, or is a county of itself. Such boroughs are, for the purposes of the Act, administrative counties.

Burgh.—The Scottish equivalent for "borough." There are three kinds of burghs, viz., parliamentary burghs; municipal (or police) burghs; royal burghs (governed by crown charters); and, formerly, burghs of barony (governed by magistrates, but subject to the superior of the barony).

Chapelry.—An ecclesiastical division of a parish or parishes; is now generally termed ecclesiastical district.

Civil Parish.—A place where a separate poor rate is levied; in England and Wales many former townships have been constituted civil parishes. Where "par." is inserted, "civ. par." is to be understood, unless otherwise stated as "eccl. dist." or "q.s. par."

Commot.—A territorial division, restricted to the county of Carmarthen; derived from "commonty," i.e., pasture right.

County or Shire.—A territorial division. Three terms are employed to describe a county.

* (a) Ancient, Geographical or Civil County. Consists of Parliamentary Constituencies and Ecclesiastical Parishes.

† (b) Administrative County. Consists of Petty Sessional Divisions, Urban and Rural Districts, and Civil Parishes.

(c) Registration County. Registration Districts (usually identical with Poor Law Unions or Parishes) and their Constituent Civil Parishes.

* There is no ancient County of London. By Local Govt. Act, 1888, London was constituted an Administrative County from parts of the Ancient Counties of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent.

† In Scotland, the Administrative County is exclusive of Burghs, Parliamentary or Royal, but inclusive of Police Burghs.

Croft.—A small farm or field.

Ecclesiastical District.—A division, for ecclesiastical purposes only, of a parish or parishes.

Hamlet.—A small scattered village, a group of houses, a section of a parish.

Hundred.—A territorial division of most English and Welsh counties; is supposed to have originally contained a hundred families.

Landward.—The rural part of a parish or district.

Lathe.—A division of the county of Kent, containing several hundreds or liberties; each lathe had a lathe-reeve or under-sheriff.

Liberty.—A territorial division in several English counties; sometimes embracing more than one parish, and enjoying certain stated privileges.

Local Government District.—A town, or other populous place of a more or less urban nature, which has adopted the Public Health Act.

Market Town.—A town holding markets on specified days—generally once a week.

Metropolitan Borough.—A division of the administrative county of London: the term is restricted to this county.

Mother Church.—That part which retains for ecclesiastical purposes the name of the parent parish.

Parish.—A division for combined civil and ecclesiastical purposes.

Quoad Sacra Parish.—An ecclesiastical division in Scotland.

Rape.—A division of the county of Sussex, containing several hundreds or liberties; from krepp (or rope); the Norman method of dividing the land.

Riding.—A term applied to the three divisions of the county of York; from the Saxon triding, i.e. third part; Cork co. is divided into Ridings; the term also applies generally to an excise circuit.

Soke.—A liberty (from the Norman soc and sac); now only used in the county of Northampton.

Tithing.—A place where a separate ecclesiastical rate is levied.

Townland.—The equivalent in Ireland of Township: which see.

Township.—A civil division of an ancient parish or parishes in England and Wales, for the levying of a separate poor rate.

Urban District.—A term applied to "Local Government District." See above.

Wapentake.—A division for military purposes; the term is restricted to the counties of Lincoln, Notts, and York.

Ward.—A division of the counties of Cumberland, Durham, Northumberland, and Westmoreland; the county of Lanark is divided into Wards (Upper and Lower); the term also applies to the divisions of boroughs, and also to divisions of parishes within the area of the various Metropolitan Boroughs.

Note.—Terms in italics are now practically obsolete.

N. of London—parl. burgh, pop. 143,728; royal burgh, pop. 153,114; mun. burgh and town, 153,503. It is the fourth largest town in Scotland, and comprises Old and New A., the former being about 1 m. to the N. on the S. side of the Don, and the latter on the Dee; the houses are mostly built of granite. It is the seat of a flourishing University, which was formed (1860) by the union of the University and King's College (founded 1494) of Old A., and the University and Marischal College (founded 1593) of New A., and has 23 professors and about 800 students. The University receives one copy of every publication entered at Stationers' Hall; the library now contains upwards of 100,000 volumes. The largest and most imposing of A.'s public edifices is the County and Municipal Buildings (commenced 1867, completed at cost of over £80,000), a granite structure with tower 190 ft. high. Duthie Park (1883), 47 ac. in extent, is on the SW. side of the city. The docks are extensive, Victoria Dock being the principal one, extending 34 ac., with a quayage of 2000 yards. Girdleness Lighthouse, with revolving light (alt. 185 ft.), stands on Girdle Ness at the S. of the entrance to the harbour. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Exports—linens, woollens, cotton yarns, granite, cattle, animal produce, and preserved meats, a large trade being done in the latter with ships sailing from London, Glasgow, and Liverpool. A. is the head of the fishery dist. between Montrose and Peterhead, and fish-curing is extensively carried on. There are important shipbuilding yards; engineering, chemical, meat-preserving, tanning, and granite-polishing works; breweries, distilleries, and paper-mills; with mfrs. of woollen, linen, cotton, combs, and tobacco. The existing part of the Cathedral of St. Machar (begun about 1357, completed 1527) stands in Old A. A. is the birthplace of Cruden, author of the Concordance; John Hill Burton, historian; and Sir John Steel, sculptor. The burgh returns 2 members to Parliament (2 divisions, viz., North and South, 1 member for each div.); the University unites with that of Glasgow in returning 1 member.

Aberdeenshire, a maritime co. in the NE. of Scotland; bounded N. and E. by the North Sea; S. by the cos. of Kincardine, Forfar, and Perth; and W. by the cos. of Inverness and Banff. Civ. co. pop. 304,439, or 154 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co. pop. 144,570. The coast is mostly bold and rocky, and with little indentation. The chief promontories are Kinnaird's Head, Rattray Head, and Buchan Ness, the last being the most easterly point of Scotland. The surface, on the whole, is hilly and mountainous. It is lowest in the districts bordering on the coasts; hilly in the interior, with much moor, but also with many slopes and hollows in a good state of cultivation; and grandly mountainous in the SW., where numerous summits, including Ben Macdhui (4269 ft.), rise above 3000 ft. Much of the country is well wooded. The chief rivers are all famous for their fishing, and include the Dee, Don, Ythan, Ugie, and Deveron. Granite is the principal rock, and is extensively quarried for exportation. The soil has been rendered highly productive under skilful farming. Large numbers of fat cattle are annually reared and sent to the principal markets of Scotland and England. The coast and river fisheries are extensive and valuable. (For agricultural statistics, see Appendix.) The co. comprises 82 pars. and 1 part, the parl. burgh of Aberdeen (2 members), the parl. burghs of Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead (part of the Elgin Burghs), and the police burghs of Ballater, Ellon, Fraserburgh, Huntly, Inverurie, Old Meldrum, Peterhead, Rosehearty, and Turriff. For parl. purposes it is divided into 2 divisions—viz., East and West, 1 member for each division.

Argyllshire, a maritime co. in the W. of Scotland; includes nearly all the islands of the Inner Hebrides, and is the second largest co. in Scotland. In extreme length the mainland extends about 112 m. S. from the boundary with Inverness-shire to the North Channel, and approaches the opposite coast of Ireland within a distance of 13 m.; area, 3110.1 sq. m., or 1,990,471 ac.—pop., civ. co., 73,642, or 24 persons to each sq. m.; pop. admin. co., 58,813. The mainland is much indented by picturesque and far-reaching sea lochs, which render its coast line proportionately very great. The peninsula of Kintyre extends about 55 m. S. from the Crinan Canal to the Mull of Kintyre, and is from 5 m. to 10 m. broad. Ardnamurchan Point is the most westerly projection on the mainland of Scotland. The principal sea lochs are Eil, Linnhe, Leven, Etive, and Firth of Lorne in the NW.; and Fyne, Striven, Long, and Goil branching from the Firth of Clyde. The sea views along the W. coast and among the islands are magnificent, while the loch and mountain scenery is everywhere grand and picturesque. The surface is nearly all rugged and mountainous, the low and arable land lying chiefly round the coasts. The highest summit is Ben Cruachan, alt. 3611 ft., in the NW. of the mainland; another lofty summit, Ben More, in the isl. of Mull, rises to an alt. of 3185 ft. The largest lake is Loch Awe, which stretches for upwards of 20 m. S. from the base of Ben Cruachan. The chief islands are Mull, Islay, Jura, Tyree, Coll, Rum, Colonsay, and many smaller. The arable land constitutes about one-eighth of the entire area. Slate is extensively quarried and exported. The fisheries are very important, especially the herring fishery on Loch Fyne. There are several large distilleries in Islay and at Campbeltown. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Railway communication extends through Perthshire to Oban, and also northwards to Ballachulish, on the NW. of Argyllshire; the W. Highland Ry. traverses the eastern portion of the co. The co. comprises the districts of Lochiel, Ardgour, Sunart, Ardnamurchan, and Morven, Lorn, Argyll, Cowal, Knapdale, and Kintyre, 39 pars., the parl. and police burghs of Campbeltown, Inveraray, and Oban (part of the Ayr burghs), and the police burghs of Dunoon, Lochgilphead, and Tobermory. Barrow in Furness, parl. and co. bor., manufacturing and seaport town with ry. stas. on Furness Ry., N. Lancashire, at the extremity of the Furness peninsula, opposite the Isle of Walney, 50 m. NW. of Liverpool by water and 265 m. from London by rail—parl. and co. bor., 11,023 ac., pop. 57,586. In 1848 it was a fishing vil. of only 100 inhabitants; its rapid growth is owing to the abundance of hematite iron ore in the district, about 500,000 tons of which are annually required for the blast-furnaces, and to the discovery of the Bessemer process of manufacturing steel. The bor. contains the Vickers Maxim Ordnance factories, situated on Walney Isl., and also Vickerstown. There are immense iron and steel works, large jute, flax, and paper works, extensive shipbuilding yards, and works for the making of ship-armour, railway waggons, and rolling stock; the bor. has also a considerable interest in the Russian petroleum trade. Cattle are imported from Belfast and America, and timber, grain, and flour from Canada; iron ore and pig-iron are largely exported. There are large and commodious docks. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The town, which is well built, stands on what was formerly Barrow isl.; the isl. was reclaimed from the sea, and the rest of the channel converted into docks. A steam tramway, 9 m. in length, connects the outskirts of the town with the docks. The new steam ferry to Walney Isl. is capable of accommodating 700 passengers and 10 vehicles. Barrow returns 1 member; it was made a parl. bor. in 1885.

Ouse, crossed by a bridge of 5 arches, and on main line of M. R., 49¾ m. NW. of London; parl. and mun. bor. (containing the pars. of SS. Cuthbert, John, Mary, Paul, and Peter), 2223 ac., pop. 35,144. Market days, Monday and Saturday. It has important mfrs. of agricultural implements, straw-plait, and lace. It is also eminent as an educational centre. Among its endowments is a free grammar school, founded in 1561 by Sir W. Harpur; the annual income from this endowment, originally £40, is now enormously increased in value, and supports many other educational and charitable institutions. The town contains many relics of John Bunyan (1628–88), author of the "Pilgrim's Progress," who, born at Elstow in the vicinity, was imprisoned for twelve years in Bedford Gaol. The town returns 1 member to Parl.—2. Bedford, west sub. of Leigh, SW. Lancashire; partly contains B. Leigh St. Thomas, eccl. dist.; pop. 10,704.

Bedford Level, flat marshy dist., on the E. coast of England, comprising the greater part (703 sq. m.) of what is called the Fens—the whole of the Isle of Ely, Cambridgeshire, 89 sq. m. in Huntingdonshire, 98½ in Norfolk, 12½ in Northamptonshire, 47 in Suffolk and SE. part of Lincolnshire. Extreme length from N. to S., 60 m.; breadth, 40 m. Two cuts or canals, the Bedford Rivers, Old and New, have been constructed from the borders of Huntingdonshire through the Isle of Ely to confluence with r. Stoke; the New r. is 100 ft. wide, the Old 70 ft., and these are both navigable for upwards of 20 m. It is also intersected by the Nene, Cam, Ouse, and Welland rivers. Much of the land has been reclaimed at vast expense; and grain, flax, and coleseed are raised in considerable quantities. Wild fowl abound, and are caught in great numbers for the London market.

Bedfordshire, or Beds, a midland co. of England, bounded by the cos. of Northampton, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Herts, and Bucks. Greatest length, N. and S., 36 m.; greatest breadth, E. and W., 20 m.; area of admin. co., 302,947 ac., pop. 171,707. The surface is mostly flat, varied in the S. by a spur of the Chiltern Hills, and in the NW. by a range of chalk hills. The chief rivers are the Great Ouse, with its affl. the Ivel, and the r. Lea. The country along the banks of the Ouse and other streams is highly verdant and luxuriant. The greater part of the surface is under tillage; indeed, agriculture, it is said, is further advanced here than in any other English county. On the heavy soils the principal crops are wheat and beans. The sandy and chalky soils of the middle districts are well adapted for horticultural husbandry, and vegetables are extensively grown for the markets of London, Cambridge, &c. There is excellent grazing ground in the SE., this co. being noted for its breeds of sheep and cattle. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal mfrs. are agricultural implements, straw-plait for hats, and sedge-mat making. Phosphate of lime, fuller's earth, stone, and silver sand, are all found. Bedfordshire contains 138 pars., the parl. and mun. bor. of Bedford (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Dunstable and Luton. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Ely. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 2 divs., viz., Northern or Biggleswade, Southern or Luton, 1 member for each div.

Antrim, but partly also in Holywood and Knockbreda pars., co. Down, at the influx of the Lagan to Belfast Lough, 113 m. N. of Dublin by rail, 135 from Glasgow, and 156 from Liverpool—co. bor., 16,504 ac., pop. 349,180; parl. bor., pop. 348,705. Market days, Wednesday and Friday. On the land side the city is bounded and sheltered by a lofty and picturesque ridge of hills, which ends abruptly in the basaltic eminence of Cavehill (1188 ft.). It presents a clean, prosperous, and business-like appearance, and possesses wide and regular streets, elegant and substantial buildings, and beautiful environs. An insignificant vil. in 1612, when Scotch and English colonists first settled there, B. is now the chief seat of the trade and mfrs. of Ireland, and the second port next to Dublin. Of its numerous educational institutions, the most important is Queen's College, opened in 1849; it has professorships in arts, law, medicine, and science, including engineering and agriculture. Amongst the chief public buildings are the new City Hall, built on the site of the old Linen Hall; the Free Library, containing also the Art Gallery and Museum; and the Ulster Hall with accommodation for 3000 people. The Albert Memorial, erected 1870, in the form of a clock tower, has a height of 143 ft. B. is the chief seat of the linen industry; bleaching, dyeing, and calico-printing are extensively carried on. Some of the flax-mills are very large. There are flour and oil mills, chemical works, iron foundries, breweries, distilleries, alabaster and barilla mills, rope and sailcloth yards. There is an immense trade in whisky and tobacco, while the manufacture of mineral waters and ham and bacon curing form important branches of trade. From the extensive shipbuilding yards on Queen's isl. the largest steamers in the world have been launched. The docks and wharfage have become very extensive. B. has constant inter-communication with all large ports in Great Britain, and by this means much of its foreign trade is carried on. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The bor. returns 4 members to Parl.—4 divs., East, South, West, North.

Berwickshire, a maritime co. in the extreme SE. of Scotland, extending in extreme breadth about 20 m. between Haddingtonshire and the English border, and in extreme length about 33 miles between Roxburghshire and the North Sea; coast-line about 20 m.; area, 457.2 sq. m., or 292,577 ac.; pop. civ. co., 30,824 or 67 persons to each sq. m.; pop. admin. co., 30,069. Limestone, sandstone, coal, and copper occur, with traces of quicksilver. The coast is high and rocky, and the few but important fishing harbs. are much exposed. St. Abb's Head is the main projection. Eyemouth and St. Abb's are the principal harbs. The Lammermuir Hills, to the average breadth of 7 m., occupy all the N.; a bleak and mostly moorland tract of 5 m. in breadth, but somewhat diversified towards the E., succeeds; and the luxuriant and fertile district, called the Merse, slopes from this to the banks of the Tweed. The district of Lauderdale, on the W., is chiefly upland. The Tweed traces about half of the S. boundary, and receives the Leader, Eden, Leet, and the Whiteadder (with its affl. the Blackadder). The r. Eye enters the North Sea at Eyemouth. The lands on Tweedside are in a very high state of cultivation; the rest of the co. is chiefly pastoral. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX). The fisheries, both on the coast and in the Tweed, are among the most important in Scotland. There are mfrs. of paper, woollens, blanketings, linen, &c. Many places in the co. have been closely associated with stirring events in Scottish history, and there are many remains of ancient castles and strongholds full of interest to the antiquarian. The co. comprises 32 pars., and the police burghs of Coldstream, Duns, Eyemouth, and Lauder. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

The town is situated on the N. side of the mouth of the r. Tweed, here crossed by a magnificent ry. viaduct of 28 arches (alt., 138 ft.), and by a narrow old stone bridge of 15 arches which connect it with Tweedmouth and Spittal. The fisheries are very important; the exports include wool, whisky, grain, coal, salmon, herrings, &c.; timber is imported. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) There is a lighthouse on the pier head with 2 fixed lights seen at distances of 8 and 12 miles; there is also a coastguard sta., harbour, and dock, the latter constructed at a cost of £50,000. Shipbuilding is carried on to some extent; other industries are iron-founding, the mfr. of sulphuric acid, agricultural implements and manures, ropes, &c. There are fairs for horses and cattle in March, May, and November. The Town Hall belfry has a peal of 8 bells on which the curfew is still rung every night. B.'s origin is ascribed to the Northumbrian kings. It was an important seaport in the reign of Alexander I., and for centuries its possession was contended for by the English and Scotch, but was finally ceded to Edward IV. in 1482. In 1551 it was made a free town, and on the accession of James I. (1603) ceased to be of importance as a frontier stronghold. The walls and part of the old fortifications remain. Barracks for infantry are still maintained.

Bristol, parl. and co. bor., city, par., and seaport, with ry. stas., G. W. & M. J. R. (Temple Meads) and M. R. local line (St. Philip's), in Gloucestershire and Somersetshire, but also a separate co. in itself with its own assizes; at the confluence of the rivers Avon and Frome, 6 m. from the Bristol Channel at Avonmouth and 117½ m. W. of London by rail, the port being 26 m. from Cardiff, 71 from Swansea, 232 from Dublin, 255 from Cork, and 301 from Liverpool—entire parl. bor. (partly in Somerset), 9675 ac., pop. 321,935; co. bor. and par., 11,942 ac., pop. 329,366. Bristol is built on a number of eminences and has a fine appearance. It contains important institutions, religious, educational, and charitable, the latter including the well-known Müller Orphanages. There is a central free library with 8 branches. It has several fine churches, notably the cathedral (1142–1160), and the church of St. Mary Redcliff. It includes Clifton (which see); at Clifton Down a magnificent suspension bridge spans the r. Avon, having an elevation of 275 ft. above low-water mark. In Tyndall Park stands the B. University College, opened in 1876; the B. Medical School was affiliated in 1892. From an early date B. has been a seaport of great importance, its position being very favourable to commerce; it was at one time the greatest English wool port, a position now held by London. In the reign of Henry II. it carried on trade with the N. of Europe, and between 1239 and 1247 there was occasion for enlarging and improving the accommodation for the shipping. There are extensive docks, not only within the city itself, but also at Avonmouth on the N. side of the mouth of the r., and at Portishead on the S. side, all of which belong to the Corporation; the floating dock was formed by diverting the course of the r. Avon for about 3 m. and transforming the bed of the river into a harbour. A new dock at Avonmouth will hold the largest vessels afloat; and both these docks are in direct communication with the city by railway. B. communicates with the Severn and Thames by canals. The coasting trade is of great magnitude, steamers plying regularly between B. and Cardiff, Swansea, London, Cork, Dublin, Liverpool, and Glasgow; while the foreign trade extends to nearly all parts of the world. Here the first steamer to cross the Atlantic (1838) was built. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) An important coalfield extends 16 m. SE. to Radstock in Somerset. B. has mfrs. of tobacco, cocoa, and chocolate, artistic furniture, glass, soap, and earthenware; brewing, shipbuilding, tanning, and sugar-refining; extensive chemical, engineering works, and iron foundries. The principal imports are sugar, grain, hides, and timber; exports include coal, copper, iron, oils, salt, and chemicals. Southey and Chatterton, poets, were natives of B. Bristol returns 4 members to Parliament—4 divisions, viz., West, North, East, and South. The diocese of Bristol was separated from that of Gloucester in 1897; it includes the co. of the city, and part of Gloucestershire and Wiltshire.

Bristol Channel, large inlet on the SW. coast, forming an expansion of the estuary of the Severn, separating S. Wales from the cos. of Somerset and Devon. It is about 85 miles long, and from 5 to 43 wide. The tide, which rises to a greater height here than anywhere else on the English coast, flows so rapidly as to produce in the mouths of the rivers the bore, or a sudden tidal wave. On some occasions spring-tides rise to between 60 and 70 feet in height. Its depth varies from 5 to 40 fathoms. The chief rivers flowing into it are the Severn, Avon, Ax, Parrett, Taff, Taw, Torridge, Towy, Wye, and Usk. In the mouth of the channel is Lundy with lighthouse.

It is intersected by the chalk range of the Chiltern Hills, which extend NE. from Oxfordshire to Bedfordshire, the highest point being Wendover Hill, 905 ft. The country here is beautifully wooded, chiefly with oak and beech. To the S. there is much excellent grazing land. The fertile "Vale of Aylesbury" lies in the centre of the co., verdant with rich meadows and pasturage. Further N. the heavy arable land is now being brought under steam cultivation, and excellent crops of wheat, beans, &c., are produced. (For agricultural statistics, see Appendix.) Farms are generally of small size, and are leased on a yearly tenure. Pigs and calves are largely reared on the numerous dairy-farms, and great numbers of ducks are sent yearly to the metropolis from the neighbourhood of Aylesbury; immense quantities of butter, cream cheese, &c., are also sent to the London market. Chalk burning and limestone quarrying are the principal industries apart from agricultural pursuits. The making of wooden chairs, spades, brush-handles, bowls, &c., from beech trees (for which the co. is noted), is carried on to a considerable extent. A small part of the female population is employed in the mfr. of thread-lace and straw-plaiting; there are also mfrs. of silk, shoes, and paper. Caithness-shire, a maritime co. in the extreme NE. of the mainland of Scotland. The side adjoining Sutherlandshire measures about 33 miles; the coast on the Pentland Firth about 41 miles; and the coast on the North Sea about 43 miles; area, 685.8 sq. m. or 438,878 ac.—pop. civ. co., 33,870 or 49 persons to each sq. m.; pop. admin. co., 30,849. The coast along the N. and partly on the E. is bold and precipitous; between Wick and the Ord of Caithness, in the SE., it is mostly low and sandy. The chief promontories are Duncansbay Head and Dunnet Head, the latter being the most northerly point of the mainland. The surface in general is slightly undulating, and is much interspersed with small lochs and tracts of morass. It rises into mountains along the landward border, the chief summit of which, Morven, has an alt. of 2313 ft. The streams are numerous, but small; the principal are the Berridale and the Wick Water, flowing to the North Sea, and the Thurso and the Forss, flowing to the Pentland Firth. Flagstone is extensively quarried for exportation; other exports are agricultural produce, and cured fish. The soil, though generally poor, is well cultivated. Sheep farming is largely followed, the wool being celebrated for its fine quality. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The coast fisheries are among the most important in the country; great quantities of herrings are annually cured and exported. The river Thurso is famed for its splendid salmon-fishing. The co. is noted for the sport which it affords, and a considerable portion of the land is under deer forests. The H. R. enters the co. at Strath Halladale and branches at Georgemas Junction to Thurso and Wick, both termini; the latter place, from which is a branch of the ry. to Lybster, is the chief port and capital of the co. C. has regular steamer connection with the principal Scotch ports. The co. comprises 10 pars., the parl. and royal burgh of Wick (part of the Wick Burghs—1 member), and the police burghs of Pulteneytown and Thurso. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

There is a cattle market on Monday and a corn and general market on Saturday. It was anciently a Roman station, was burned by the Danes in 871 and 1010, and was made the site of a castle by William the Conqueror. Cambridge has long been famous as the seat of a university. Its trade is derived from the university, and from its being the centre of an agricultural district. Before the railways it had a very considerable business by river with King's Lynn. It is now a chief station on the Great Eastern line, and is also connected with the L. & NW., M., and G. N. Rys. It has no mfrs. Jeremy Taylor (1613–1667) was a native. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament.—The University of Cambridge consists of 17 colleges, each of which is governed by its own rules and customs. The 17 colleges are:—St. Peter's or Peter House (founded in 1284), Clare, (1326), Pembroke (1347), Gonville and Caius (1348), Trinity Hall (1350), Corpus Christi (1352), King's (1441), Queen's (1448), St. Catherine's (1473), Jesus (1496), Christ's (1505), St. John's (1511), Magdalene (1519), Trinity (1546), Emmanuel (1584), Sidney Sussex (1596), Downing (1800). There were two unendowed colleges, Ayerst and Selwyn; but the former, opened in 1884, was closed in 1896. Fitzwilliam Hall is for non-collegiate students. There are also 2 colleges—Girton (2 miles from Cambridge) and Newnham—for women, who, after their course of study and on passing the examinations, receive a certificate; but no degree is conferred upon them. There are also Religious training colleges—Ridley Hall (Church of England), Westminster College (formerly Cavendish College), and one other, both Nonconformist. The University Library contains upwards of 450,000 volumes, besides many valuable MSS. The observatory, laboratories, and museums for the study of the natural sciences are splendidly equipped. The N. section of the county, including the Isle of Ely which for many purposes is a separate county, and part of the Great Bedford Level, is a large flat expanse of country, which, for the most part, formerly consisted of fen and marsh. It is now intersected in all directions by wide trenches or canals. The land, thus drained and reclaimed, is a rich, black soil, and bears excellent crops. From this tract the pleasant vale of the Cam stretches away to the SW., and contains a great number of excellent dairy farms. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Apart from agriculture, brewing and malting are the chief industries. Cambridgeshire comprises 168 pars., and part of one other, the parl. and mun. bor. of Cambridge (1 member, and Cambridge University 2 members), and the mun. bor. of Wisbech. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Ely. The co. is traversed from S. to N. by the Cambridge main line of the G. E. R. with numerous branch lines into all parts of the county. The G. N. & L. & NW. Rys. also serve the western part by branch lines. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 3 divisions, viz., Northern or Wisbech, Western or Chesterton, and Eastern or Newmarket.

Market day, Wednesday and Saturday. The antiquity of C. is attested by the Druidical and Roman remains which have been found there. The Romans, who called it Durovernum (supposed to be derived from the ancient British Durwhern), seem to have built its walls, some parts of which still remain. Its present name comes from the Saxon Cantwara-byrig, signifying "the borough or town of the men of Kent," whose kings resided here. The conversion of King Ethelbert to Christianity by St. Augustine was the occasion of its cathedral and abbey being founded (597). During the ravages of the Danes (843–1011) the city suffered severely; but at the time of the Norman Conquest it had recovered its importance. In 1170, Thomas à Becket, the Archbishop, was murdered at the altar of the cathedral; which in after-years drew pilgrims from all parts of Christendom to visit his shrine. The Archbishop of Canterbury is primate of all England, and, next to the royal family, takes precedence of all peers, and crowns the new sovereign in Westminster Abbey. He has the power of giving degrees in divinity, law, and medicine. His seats are Lambeth Palace and Addington Park. C. cathedral is one of the finest in England, exhibiting specimens of all the styles of architecture from Early Norman to latest English. The public buildings include the Guildhall, Agricultural Hall, Kent and County Hospital, Art Gallery, &c.; the Grammar School was founded by Henry VIII. There are extensive barracks for infantry and cavalry in the city, which is the depôt of all cavalry regiments on foreign service. A good trade in grain, hops, and malt is carried on; also mfrs. of linen and worsted. C. returns 1 member to Parliament.

Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Situated near the border and on the main route of traffic between England and Scotland, Carlisle has been closely associated with many important events in the history of the two countries. It was a Roman station (Luguvallum) on the great wall of Severus, and the seat (Caer Luel) of the old British kings of Cumbria; was destroyed by the Danes in 875; rebuilt and fortified by William II. (Rufus) in 1092, the walls having three gates; held from 1135 to 1153 by David of Scotland, who died here; was subsequently in the hands of the English, its possession being repeatedly contested by the Scots; and was occupied by Prince Charles Edward Stuart in 1745 on his invasion of England. C. is the see of a bishop. The cathedral, famed for its E. window, was founded by William Rufus and completed by Henry I. The old castle, which is used as barracks, has a situation commanding a fine view of the Vale of the Eden. Other public buildings are the Court Houses, Market, Grammar School, Free Library and Museum, and Science and Art School. C. is a great ry. centre. The sta. is the terminus of no fewer than 7 lines, viz., N. B. R., C. R., G. & SW. R., L. & NW. R., M. R., N. E. R., Maryport and Carlisle Ry. The mfrs. consist of cottons, woollens, linens, iron, leather, biscuits, &c. In the Eden there is good salmon fishing. Carlisle is 20 miles by rail SW. of Silloth; a dock was constructed there in 1855, and Silloth has gradually superseded Port Carlisle, which is no longer used as a harbour. An annual race meeting is held. (For shipping statistics, see Appendix.) The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament.

The surface generally is upland or mountainous, much of it being waste. The Fforest Fawr mts. rise on the NE. border, the chief summit, Carmarthen Van, having an alt. of 2632 ft. The vale of the river Towy extends in length about 30 miles NE. and SW. through the middle of the co. The uplands consist chiefly of slate or limestone; old red sandstone occurs about the estuary of the Towy; coal and ironstone are worked in the SE. Gold is found at Caio; copper, silver, lead, marble, slate, and building stone are worked. Good crops of oats, barley, and wheat are produced in the valleys, but the principal industry is stock-raising. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The fisheries are of some importance. The principal towns are Carmarthen, Kidwelly, Llandilo, Llanelly, Llandovery, Llandebie, Llangadock, and Newcastle-Emlyn. The co. comprises 85 pars., the Carmarthen Boroughs (Carmarthen and Llanelly—1 member), and the mun. bors. of Carmarthen, Kidwelly, and Llandovery. It is entirely in the diocese of St. David's. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 2 divisions, viz., Eastern and Western.

Channel Islands, a group of islands, on the S. side of the English Channel, 10 m. W. of coast of France and 80 m. S. of coast of England. The principal members of the group are Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark or Sercq, and Herm. Geographically connected with France, they have been politically attached to England since the Conquest, and are now all that remain to it of the dukedom of Normandy. The land is parcelled out among a great number of small proprietors, and is carefully cultivated. The growing of fruit and vegetables under glass for the British markets is the principal industry. The three largest islands are each noted for a particular breed of cattle. Jersey has a separate legislature, so also has Guernsey combined with Alderney, Sark, and the smaller islands. The language is nearly the same as the old Norman French, but English is generally used and taught in all the parochial schools. See JERSEY, GUERNSEY, ALDERNEY, SARK, AND HERM.

The first dockyard was established in 1588. Since that date great extensions to the marine resources of the place have been made. The Royal Dockyard covers an area of 500 ac., and contains a ropery, machine shops and foundries; it extends along the Medway for 3 miles. The Government shipbuilding establishment, situated at Brompton, about ½ mile below C., contains 5 tidal docks, 8 building slips and other docks, capable of turning out the largest men-of-war fully equipped. Here is St. Bartholomew's Hospital for Seamen, and Brennan's torpedo factory. The C. Lines, which are among the most elaborate fortifications in the kingdom, consist of an intricate system of trenches, batteries, and subterranean passages. Besides the extensive system of dockyards, they include barracks, hospitals, an arsenal with a large park of artillery, a gymnasium, a military school for sappers and engineers, a military institute, and a convict prison. For purposes of defence the "Lines" have been replaced by a chain of modern forts. Troops for India are generally embarked at Chatham. In 1667 the Dutch fleet under De Ruyter succeeded in sailing up the Medway as far as Chatham, but did little damage. Numerous remains have been discovered of the Romans, who appear to have had a cemetery at C. The bor., which was created by the Reform Act of 1832, and contains most of the eccl. dists. of Brompton and New Brompton, returns 1 member to Parliament.

Cheltenham, parl. and mun. bor., par., and watering-place, with ry. stas., M. R. (Queen's Rd., High St.), and G. W. R. (St. James's Sq.), E. Gloucestershire, 7 miles NE. of Gloucester and 109 miles NW. of London—parl. bor., 6886 ac., pop. 52,858; mun. bor. and par., 4726 ac., pop. 49,439. Market days, Thursday and Saturday; is finely situated in a valley watered by the river Chelt, and sheltered on the E. and NE. by the Cotswold Hills. C. is a fashionable resort, is one of the healthiest, cleanest, and cheapest places in the kingdom, and has a reputation as an educational centre. It owes its prosperity to its mineral springs, which were accidentally discovered in 1716. They are four in number, and are all saline, with traces of iodine, with the exception of one, which is chalybeate. In 1788 George III. derived much benefit from their use, and C. immediately came into favour. It is now a town of handsome squares, crescents, and terraces, while its promenades and pump-rooms are reckoned among the finest in England. There are winter gardens, baths, a public library, science and art schools, and public parks. C. is the headquarters of the Cotswold Hunt. Among the educational institutions of C. are a foundation grammar-school, established 1574; a proprietary college, opened 1842; a ladies' college; and a training college for male and female teachers. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament; its parl. limits were extended in 1885, to include part of Charlton Kings parish.

Chepstow, urb. dist., market town, river-port, and par., with ry. sta., G. W. R., in co. and 20½ miles S. of Monmouth; urb. dist. and par., 1096 ac., pop. 3067; P.O., T.O. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday; is situated on the Wye, 2 miles from its junction with the Severn, amidst scenery of much beauty and grandeur. C. has a river and coast trade in coal, iron, timber, bark, cider, &c. Chepstow is a sub-port of Gloucester. The river is navigable for large vessels as far as the bridge, but from the narrowness and depth of the channel the tide forms a dangerous bore, frequently rising to the height of 50 ft., and even higher; Newport is consequently more in favour as a port. The castle (11th century), which stands on the summit of a cliff washed by the Wye, gradually sank into ruins after its capture by Cromwell, but is still a magnificent pile. There are salmon fisheries in the Severn and the Wye.

Cheshire, or Chester, maritime co. of England, but for assize purposes included in the N. and S. Wales circuits, bounded on the NW. by the Irish Sea, and bordering on the cos. of Lancaster, York, Derby, Stafford, Salop, Denbigh, and Flint; extreme length, NE. and SW., 58 miles; extreme breadth, 40 miles; average breadth, 18 miles; area, 654,825 ac.; pop. 827,191. The co. is traversed by the main line of the L. & NW. R. with the Chester and Holyhead and the Manchester branches of that Company, the northern line of the G. W. R., and is partly served by the N. S. and G. C. Rys. C. forms, towards the Irish Sea, a flat peninsula, the Wirrall (12 miles by 7 miles), between the estuaries of the Mersey and the Dee, and inland a vast plain separating the mountains of Wales from those of Derbyshire. This plain is diversified with fine woods of oak, &c., and is studded with numerous small lakes or meres. A low ridge of sandstone hills runs N. from Congleton, near the E. border, and another extends from the neighbourhood of Malpas to Frodsham, near the estuary of the Mersey. The chief rivers are the Mersey, with its affluent the Bollin, the Weaver, with its affluent the Wheelock, and the Dee. There are many canals; the Manchester Ship Canal cuts the co. from Eastham to Warrington. Others are the Trent and Mersey, Bridgewater, Shropshire, Union, Macclesfield, and Peak Forest canals. The soil consists of marl, mixed with clay and sand, and is generally fertile. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) There are numerous excellent dairy farms, on which the celebrated Cheshire cheese is made; also extensive market gardens, the produce of which is sent to Liverpool, Manchester, and the neighbouring towns. Salt has been long worked; it is obtained from rock salt and saline springs; the principal works are at Nantwich, Northwich, Middlewich, Sandbach at Weston Point, and Winsford. Coal and ironstone are worked in the districts of Macclesfield and Stockport. There are mfrs. of cotton, silk, ribbons, linen, chemicals, &c., carried on chiefly in the towns of the E. div.; and shipbuilding, on the Mersey. Railway rolling stock is manufactured extensively. Cheshire contains 464 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Birkenhead, the greater part of the parl. bors. of Chester, Ashton under Lyne, and Warrington, Stalybridge, and Stockport. There are three co. bors., viz., Birkenhead, Chester, and Stockport. It is in the diocese of Chester. For parl. purposes is divided into 8 divs., viz., Wirral, Eddisbury, Macclesfield, Crewe, Northwich, Altrincham, Hyde, Knutsford.

Cheshunt, urb. dist., par., and ry. sta., G. E. R., Herts, 14¾ miles N. of London by rail; urb. dist. and par., 8479 ac., pop. 12,292; P.O., T.O. There are market gardens and brickfields. C. Park is a seat.

Chester, parl. and co. bor., city, and co. in itself, locally in W. Cheshire, about 20 miles by the river from the Irish Sea, 16 m. S. of Liverpool, 38½ m. SW. of Manchester, and 179 miles by rail NW. of London, with ry. stas., (General Sta.) L. & NW. & G. W. R., (Northgate) C. L. Jt. Comm., (Liverpool Road) G. C. R.; parl. bor. (extending into Flintshire), 3393 ac., pop. 46,207; co. bor., 2862 ac., pop. 38,309. Market day, Saturday; stands on a rocky height on right bank of river Dee, which is here crossed by the splendid Grosvenor Bridge with a single span of 200 ft., the largest save one, it is believed, in Europe. C. is a great railway centre. It is connected with the Mersey by the Ellesmere Canal. As a port it has been injuriously affected by the silting up of the Dee, and its shipping trade is now inconsiderable. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) C. is a very ancient city; it was the Devana Castra of the Romans, and the Caerleon Vawr, or "City of the Great Legion," of the Cymri. It is the only city in England that still possesses its walls entire. C. was made the see of a bishop in 1541. The cathedral, a massive Gothic structure, is of great antiquity, as are also many of the churches. The four main streets, meeting at the market-cross and known as the "Rows," supply a quaint and characteristic feature. The fronts of the second floor recede, and the space thus left between the first and third stories provides a covered promenade reached by steps from the street. The city possesses several fine examples of the old timber houses of the 17th century. Amongst other public buildings are the Town Hall, Public Library, Grosvenor Museum, and School of Science and Art. Grosvenor

Park is a public recreation ground. There is a race-course outside the city walls known as the Roodee; an annual meeting takes place in May. The course is the property of the Corporation, as are the Dee Mills. The castle was taken down towards the end of last century, and replaced by a barracks, a county jail, and assize courts. C. has mfrs. of boots and shoes for exportation and the wholesale home trade; furniture and upholstery; paint, shot, and lead pipes; it has also iron foundries and a shipbuilding yard. The principal exports are cheese, lead, copper-plates, cast-iron, and coal. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament.

Cinque Ports, or Five Ports, the name of an ancient jurisdiction extending along the coast of Sussex and Kent. The original members of the body were Hastings, New Romney, Hythe, Dover, and Sandwich; to these were afterwards added the "Ancient Towns" of Winchelsea and Rye, and a great many other places, which, with the title of Link or Member, held a subordinate position. The C. P. were constituted to form a defence along the SE. seaboard of England. In the lack of any regular navy they furnished, until the reign of Henry VII., nearly all the ships and seamen requisite for the service of the State. In return for their services they enjoyed many important privileges. Their old charter, the oldest on record, being 99 years older than the first charter of the city of London, refers to previous documents of the time of Edward the Confessor and William the Conqueror. They are under the jurisdiction of a Lord Warden, who is admiral of the ports and also governor of Dover Castle. Their old organisation, however, was broken up by the Municipal Reform Act, and the jurisdiction of the Lord Warden has been much modified and diminished. The Cinque Ports are represented in Parliament by 3 members.

R., in SE. of Gloucestershire, on the Churn, and on the Thames and Severn Canal, 21¾ miles SE. of Cheltenham by rail; urb. dist. and par., 5286 ac., pop. 7536. Market day, Monday; was an important military station of the Romans, who called it Corinum or Corinium, the English invaders adding the usual -ceaster. Numerous Roman antiquities have been found, and remains of the amphitheatre and the ancient walls are still to be seen. Cirencester has relics of an abbey founded in 1117. Its church (St. John) is a fine old structure of the 15th century. Its industries are chiefly agricultural. The live stock and wool market is one of the best in the W. of England. About 1½ mile W. of town, adjacent to Oakley Park, is the Royal Agricultural College (1846). C. has also a Grammar and Technical School at which the ordinary course is supplemented by special instruction for intending agriculturists. There is also a Roman museum. The foundation-stone was laid, Jan. 1904, of the Bingham Public Library, gift of Mr. Geo. Bingham to his native town; estimated cost, including endowment, upwards of £30,000. C. is a well-known hunting centre. C. House is a seat of Earl Bathurst. C. Abbey is also a seat.

Clare.—a maritime co. of Munster province, anciently called Thomond; is bounded W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by Galway Bay and co. Galway, and E. and S. by the river Shannon, which divides it from cos. Tipperary, Limerick, and Kerry; greatest length, NE. and SW., 73 miles; greatest breadth, NW. and SE., 48 miles; average breadth, 21 miles; coast-line, 145 miles; area, 852,389 ac. (70,777 water), or 4.1 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 112,334, of whom 110,062 or 98.0 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 2036 or 1.8 Protestant Episcopalians, 157 or 0.1 Presbyterians, and 48 or 0.1 Methodists. The coast of Clare contains some of the grandest cliff scenery in the British Isles, being equalled only by Slieve League, Hoy, Orkney Mainland, and parts of Stromness; the height of the cliffs in some cases reaches nearly 1000 ft., and in no other part of the kingdom can the "rollers" of the Atlantic be seen to such advantage. Extensive oyster-beds lie off the shore of Galway Bay; and the salmon fisheries on the coast and in the estuaries of the Shannon and Fergus are very important. The chief bays on the coast are Ballyvaghan, Liscannor, and Malbay. There are many small islands off the coast, the principal being the Aran Islands. The surface varies, rising from the central valley of the river Fergus into bleak upland or mountain on the E. and W. Clay slate is the prevailing rock; limestone is abundant; slate and lead are worked; flagstones are quarried near Kilrushand Miltown Malbay. At Lisdoonvarna are mineral springs. The chief crops are oats and potatoes. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The co. comprises 76 pars. and part of 5 others, and the towns of Ennis, Ennistimmon, Kilrush, and Kilkee. Clyde.—the most important river of Scotland, and the third in point of magnitude; it rises at 1400 ft. above sea-level, on the mountains in the extreme SE. of Lanarkshire; flows in a NW. direction past Lanark, Hamilton, and Glasgow, and merges in the Firth of Clyde below Dumbarton; measured from the source of Little Clyde's Burn (popularly regarded as the source of the Clyde) to Dumbarton, the length of the river is 91 miles; but judged from the source of the Daer, which should be taken as the true headstream, and into which Little Clyde's Burn falls, the length is 106 miles. It has basin area of 1481 sq. miles, or, including the portion from Dumbarton to Greenock and the Gareloch, 1580 sq. miles; and is navigable to Glasgow for the largest class of ocean-going vessels; this has only been achieved by constant improvements and incessant dredging. The river is being widened at Elderslie; this involves turning about 7 ac. of land into water, whereby the river will have a breadth of 500 ft. at this point. To accomplish this, 900 ft. of rock on the bed of the river are to be removed by blasting to a depth of 28 ft. Other improvements are being carried out at Clydebank (which see). The Forth and Clyde Canal joins the Clyde at Bowling. From Dumbarton to Glasgow both banks of the river are thickly studded with shipbuilding yards and engineering works. Near Lanark are the celebrated Falls of Clyde, four in number—(1) Bonnington Linn, a single leap of 30 ft.; (2) Corra Linn, forming 3 successive falls of 84 ft.; (3) Dundaff Linn, a cascade of 10 ft.; and (4) Stonebyres, forming 3 successive falls of 80 ft. Market day, Saturday. C. is of great antiquity. It was the Camalodunum of the Romans; the Colneceaster of the Saxons; and a favourite stronghold of the Danes. The Roman walls remain almost entire, and Roman remains, including villas, with tesselated pavements, hypocausts, and baths, Samian pottery, and coins, have been found in the greatest profusion. The castle (12th century) is the largest Norman keep in England. C. is the headquarters of the Eastern military district and contains cavalry and artillery barracks. The town is the centre of a large agricultural district, and has extensive corn and cattle markets. Corn, malt, and oysters are exported from its port and suburb, Hythe, 15 miles from the sea. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The Colne oyster fishery is the property of the Corporation; this fishery, however, is not so extensive as it once was. The baize mfr. has also declined, and is superseded by silk, more especially the kind employed for umbrellas. The chief industries are iron-working and boot and shoe-making. Among the minor industrial establishments are flour-mills, engineering works, rope-yards, and lime-kilns. C. returns 1 member to Parliament.

Market day, Friday; is enclosed by a lofty wall, of triangular form and Saracenic style, 1 mile in circumference, fenced by 21 round towers, and entered by 3 principal gateways. In the SE. corner are the remains of the magnificent castle, built in 1284 by Edward I., to secure his possession of North Wales. The other objects of interest are the suspension bridge, constructed by Telford in 1826, and the tubular bridge, 410 ft. long and 18 ft. above high water, constructed by Stephenson in 1848. The curfew is still rung here. The Royal Cambrian Academy of Art now occupies a mansion which dates from 1584 and which was once inhabited by Queen Elizabeth and also by the Earl of Leicester. C. is the ancient Roman Conovium. There is some coasting trade, principally in slates, and a little shipbuilding; but the town owes its recent prosperity chiefly to its attractions as a summer resort.—2. Conway, river, N. Wales; issues from Lake Conway, in the mountainous dist. where the cos. of Merioneth, Denbigh, and Carnarvon meet, and flows NE., NW., and N., forming the boundary between Denbigh and Carnarvon, to Beaumaris Bay; is 30 miles long, and is navigable 10 miles above its mouth. Its upper part abounds in trout; pearl-mussels are found at its mouth. It waters the Vale of Conway, one of the most celebrated portions of Wales, bold and romantic in the higher part above Llanrwst, and in the lower part rich and beautiful. C. Falls have a leap of 50 ft.

Cork.*—a maritime co., and the largest in Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Limerick, E. by cos. Tipperary and Waterford, S. and SW. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by co. Kerry; greatest length, E. and W., 108 miles; greatest breadth, N. and S., 57 miles; area, 1,849,686 ac. or 8.9 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 404,611, of whom 365,724 or 90.4 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 32,021 or 7.9 Protestant Episcopalians, 1830 or 0.4 Presbyterians, and 3062 or 0.8 Methodists. The coast line is very extensive, being broken by numerous spacious inlets, which afford excellent harbours. The principal openings from W. to E. are Kenmare River, Bantry Bay, Dunmanus Bay, Roaring Water Bay, Clonakilty Bay, Courtmacsherry Bay, Kinsale Harbour, Cork Harbour, Youghal Harbour, &c. The islands of Bere, Whiddy, Clear, &c., and numerous islets, lie off the SW. coast, where the peninsulas of the mainland are elongated and rugged. The surface on the W. and SW. is mountainous or upland, attaining its greatest elevation in Caherbarnagh, a summit of 2239 ft. The general slope is to the E., and the greater part of the surface may be described as a rolling, well-watered, and fertile plain. The chief crops are oats, barley, and potatoes. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) An immense quantity of butter is produced and exported. The largest rivers are the Blackwater, Lee, and Bandon, and these are navigable by their estuaries for considerable distances. The fisheries are very extensive. Copper, lead, anthracite, coal, iron, and limestone are all worked to some extent. Copper is principally found at Durrus and Killeen, slate and barytes at Bantry. Manganese is abundant, particularly near Leap, in the S.; chalybeate springs occur at Mallow and at many other places. A peculiar kind of black chalk is found on Whiddy island. The co. comprises 239 pars., and parts of 12 others; and the parl. and mun. bor. of Cork (2 members). The Anglican diocese is co-extensive with the county. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 7 divisions, viz., North, North-East, Mid, East, West, South, and South-East, 1 member for each division.—2. Cork, cap. of co., mun. and parl. bor. and seaport with ry. stas. (Glanmire) G. S. & W. R., (Albert Quay) C. B. & S. C. R., (Albert St.) Cork, Blackrock, and Passage Ry., (Capwell) Cork and Macroom Direct Ry., (College) Cork and Muskerry Ry., on the river Lee, 11 miles above its influx into Cork Harbour, 166½ miles SW. of Dublin by rail, the port being 86 miles from Waterford, 176 from Dublin, 353 from Glasgow, 258 from Liverpool, 232 from Bristol, 234 from Plymouth, and 532 from London—parl. bor., 46,080 ac., pop. 100,022; mun. bor., 2266 ac., pop. pop. 76,122. Market daily. The greater portion of the city, which is the third largest in Ireland, stands on an island formed by two channels of the river Lee; there are here upwards of 4 miles of quayage. C. is a city of spacious streets and handsome public buildings; it has 9 bridges, public parks, one of which, the City Park, is principally used as a race-course and recreation-ground; here is a fashionable promenade the Marina, parallel with the Lee; at the W. end of the city is another pleasantly shaded promenade, the Mardyke, 1 mile long; two cemeteries, St. Joseph's and St. Finbars. In the lofty steeple of the church of St. Ann Shandon is the famous peal known as "Shandon Bells"; the steeple has the peculiarity of being faced on two sides with red sandstone, on the others with limestone. In the SW. of the city stands St. Finbar's Cathedral, a fine modern structure; it is so named after the founder of the ancient cathedral, of which no traces now remain. Other churches are numerous and include the R.C. cathedral of St. Mary's. It has also several eminent scientific and literary institutions, among which are Queen's College, affiliated to the Royal University of Ireland; the Royal Cork Institution; the Munster Dairy and Agricultural School, which has a farm of 180 ac. attached to it; and the Crawford Science and Art School (1885). The well-known Cork Butter Exchange stands in the N. of the city. The export of butter from C. is the largest in the kingdom. The Victoria Barracks accommodate both infantry and cavalry and are the headquarters of Cork Military District. Other public buildings are C. Library, Opera House, County and City Hospital, and the Court-Houses, destroyed by fire in 1891, but since rebuilt. The commerce of Cork has long been of great importance; the export trade in grain, cattle, dairy produce, and provisions is very extensive. There is regular steam communication with Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Glasgow, Plymouth, Southampton, London, Cardiff, Newport, Milford, and Bristol. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal articles of mfr. are woollen goods, gloves, and agricultural implements, and artificial fertilisers. The chief local industries are distilling, brewing, shipbuilding, iron-founding, tanning, milling, bacon curing. The diocese of Cork extends W. from Cork to Bantry Bay. The bor. returns 2 members to Parl.

* The Celtic word Cork, or Corcagh, signifies "a marsh."

Cork Harbour, a spacious and well-sheltered inlet, formed in part by the estuary of the river Lee, 11 miles below Cork city. It constitutes one of the best natural harbours in the world, and is large enough to accommodate the whole British navy, having a varying breadth up to 8 miles, with an entrance of 1½ mile by 1 mile. It contains several islands, on the largest of which, Great Island, is the town of Queenstown. The smaller islands are used as store depôts and forts, Camden Fort, Carlisle Fort, and Fort Westmoreland (formerly Spike Island) are batteries at the entrance. The other islands are occupied by ordnance and convict depôts, &c. The quays extend 3000 ft., and have a depth alongside of 35 ft. at high water; there are also slips and dry docks. It has lighthouses at Roche Point, E. side of entrance, at E. elbow of Spit Bank off Queenstown, at Lough Mahon off Meelough Spit, at Donkathel, N. side of channel, at Black Rock Castle, at Dundain, and at Tivoli. Cornwall, maritime co. of England, forming its SW. extremity; is bounded by Devon on the E., and washed on all the other sides by the sea; length, NE. and SW., 75 miles; average breadth, 22 miles; coast-line, about 200 miles; area, 868,220 ac., pop. 322,334. The S. coast is much and deeply indented, and has some good harbours. The principal openings from W. to E. are Mounts Bay, Falmouth Bay and Harbour, St. Austell Bay, Fowey Harbour, Whitsand Bay, and Plymouth Sound. Falmouth is one of the finest harbours in Britain. The indentations on the N. consist of shallow bays with few or no harbours. The chief promontories are Land's End, where the granite cliffs are about 60 ft. high; and the Lizard, the most SW. point of England. The Scilly Isles lie off Land's End, 25 miles to the SW. The Devonian range extends NE. and SW., rising in Brown Willy to an alt. of 1375 ft. The streams are numerous, but small. The principal are the Tamar (which forms the boundary with Devon), Lynher, Looe, Fowey, and Camel. There is much barren moorland, but the soil in the valleys is fertile. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The prevailing rock is granite, of a grey or bluish-grey colour, which often rises above the surface in huge, rugged masses; clay slate also abounds. The tin and copper mines of Cornwall have been celebrated from remote ages, having been known, it is supposed, to the Phœnicians; owing to foreign competition the mines have depreciated greatly in importance. Some of them are of very great depth, and have been carried beneath the sea. A large proportion of the Cornish miners have emigrated to the silver mines at Nevada, and to other mining centres. Silver, lead, zinc, arsenic, antimony, and bismuth are also found in considerable quantities. The fisheries, especially of pilchard and mackerel, are extensive and valuable. The vinery at St. Levan is second only to that at Hampton Court. The prefixes "Tre," "Pol," and "Pen," so familiar in Cornish place-names signify a "dwelling"; "pool" is a summit. The co. comprises 239 pars. (5 in the Scilly Islands), the parl. bor. of Penryn and Falmouth (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Bodmin, Falmouth, Helston, Launceston (also called Dunneheved), Liskeard, Penryn, Penzance, St. Ives, Saltash, and Truro. It is entirely in the diocese of Truro. The eldest son of the reigning sovereign inherits the title of Duke of Cornwall; this duchy carries with it valuable estates. For parl. purposes it is divided into 6 divisions, viz., Western or St. Ives, North-Western or Camborne, Truro, Mid or St. Austell, South-Eastern or Bodmin, and North-Eastern or Launceston, 1 member for each division.

Market day, Friday. C. is an ancient city (the bishopric, founded in 656, was in 1121 united to the see of Lichfield), with numerous fine old churches, schools, and hospitals. It derives its name (Coventre, or convent town) from a priory built (or rebuilt) in 1043 by Leofric and his wife Lady Godiva, of whom there is a curious and well-known legend; it is also known as "The City of the Three Spires," from three important churches, one of which, St. Michael's, is said to be the largest parish church in England. Of its fortifications (dismantled at the Restoration, the town having espoused the side of the Parliament), two gates and some portions of the wall still remain. The bor. is almost equidistant from London, Liverpool, Hull, and Bristol. C. was early celebrated for its mfrs. In the 15th century it was noted for its woollens; then for its dyeing; then for its weaving of camlets, shalloons, &c. The staple industry is cycle making, for which C. is famous; there are mfrs. of ribbons, silk, and watches; it has also woollens, carpets, cotton, art metalwork, and ironfounding. The water and gas supplies and electric lighting works are owned by the city; it also maintains baths, public libraries, and a technical institute in which weaving, typography, cycle construction, magnetism, and electricity are taught. Numerous fairs are held, and are generally well attended. C. is in the diocese of Worcester. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members till 1885.

Cumberland, a maritime and border co. of England, having the cos. of Dumfries and Roxburgh on the N., Northumberland and Durham on the E., Westmorland and Lancashire on the S., the Irish Sea on the W., and the Solway Firth on the NW.; length, NE. and SW., 75 miles; extreme breadth, E. and W., 45 miles; average breadth, 22 miles; coast line, about 75 miles; area, 973,086 ac., pop. 266,933 (the only English co. of which the ancient, or geographical, the administrative, and the registration cos. are co-extensive). The co. is served by the following railways—L. & NW. R., M. R., C. R., N. B. R., G. & SW. R., Furness R., Maryport and Carlisle R., and Cleator and Workington Junc. R. The coast on the Solway is low and sandy, but on the Irish Sea it is lofty and rugged; chief promontory, St. Bees Head. In the NW. the country is open and flat; it is watered by the Eden and other streams, and consists chiefly of verdant meadows and good arable land. From this plain the surface rises towards the E. and S. into a region with deep defiles or dales, which form the mountainous district of "The Lakes," the scenery of which is generally picturesque, and attracts great numbers of tourists. The principal summits are Scafell Pikes (3210 ft.), Scafell (3162 ft.), Helvellyn (3118 ft.), Skiddaw (3054 ft.), Bow Fell (2960 ft.), and Cross Fell (2892 ft.). The largest lakes are Ullswater, Derwentwater, Bassenthwaite Water, Thirlmere, Buttermere, Wast Water, Crummock Water, and Ennerdale Water. The Eden and the Derwent are the two longest rivers. The Esk passes through the co. before entering the Solway Firth, and its affluent, the Liddell, runs for some distance along the Scottish border. Coal and iron are extensively worked in the W., the coalfield stretching from the neighbourhood of Whitehaven to that of Maryport and extending inland to within 3 m. of Wigton. The principal mining centres are Cleator Moor, Harrington, Maryport, Whitehaven, and Workington; at the latter place the mines extend between 2 and 3 miles under the sea. Most of the red hæmatite iron ore worked in England is obtained from Cumberland. The chief centres for the ore are Millom, Egremont, Eskell, Whitehaven, and Cleator. Numerous blast-furnaces are constantly at work. Slate, limestone, and sandstone are abundant. Copper, cobalt, antimony, manganese, zinc ore, and gypsum are also found. Owing to the general elevation of the land, and the moisture of the climate, the cultivation of the soil is less attended to than the rearing of sheep and cattle. The dairy produce is very considerable. The salmon fishery in the Solway is also important. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Woollen mfrs. are carried on to some extent at Carlisle and some other places. Other mfrs. are paper and glass. There is shipbuilding at Whitehaven. There are many peel towers on the Scotch border, while near Carlisle and on the coast are remains of ancient Roman camps. Traces are still left of the "Wall of Hadrian." The co. comprises 213 pars., the parl. and mun. bor. of Carlisle (1 member), the parl. and mun. bor. of Whitehaven (1 member), and the mun. bor. of Workington. It is mostly in the diocese of Carlisle. For parl. purposes it is divided into 4 divisions, viz., Northern or Eskdale, Mid or Penrith, Cockermouth, and Western or Egremont, 1 member for each division.

It is built on the face of a steep rock, and the streets are connected by flights of steps. In one of the principal streets is the Butterwalk, a relic of Old Dartmouth; here the houses are arranged in piazza style, as in certain parts of Chester. The harb. is commodious and perfectly safe, and is defended at its entrance by a castle and batteries. The maritime trade is now confined to coasting, and to the shipment of barley, cider, potatoes, &c. Newcomen, inventor of the first stationary steam-engine, was a native, as was Sir Humphrey Gilbert, who acquired possession of Newfoundland for Queen Elizabeth. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) D. is the chief coaling station on the English Channel. The Royal naval cadet training college is situated at D. On the N. side of the harb. is a lighthouse, with fixed light seen 11 miles.

Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. D. has of late years been resorted to as a watering-place, and baths, libraries, bazaars, esplanade, and a promenade pier 1000 ft. in length have been erected for summer visitors. There are some excellent hotels, including one erected by the SE. Ry. Co. About 1 mile from Deal sta. are the links of the Cinque Ports Golf Club. The northern portion of the shore is now being groyned by the Case system to prevent encroachments by the sea. The town derives its importance largely from its vicinity to the "Downs," which lie between the Goodwin Sands and the mainland, and make an excellent harbour in stormy weather. There is a little boatbuilding and sailmaking. There are factories for tinning fish and vegetables. D. is a great pilot station, and the boatmen have long been famous for their skill and daring in lifeboat rescue work. There is a coastguard sta. On the beach is a tower with time-ball for the purpose of providing vessels with Greenwich time. Deal is a sub-port of Dover. Henry VIII. erected three castles in the vicinity—Walmer, Sandown, and Deal; Walmer Castle is the official residence of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports; here the Duke of Wellington died (1852); Sandown Castle, in which Col. Hutchinson, the Parliamentary leader, died (1664), has been demolished, while Deal Castle has been converted into a private residence and is the property of Lord George Hamilton. Deal is one of the Cinque Ports; it formed part of the parl. bor. of Sandwich, which was disfranchised in 1885. The Justices of the Cinque Ports, however, still sit at Deal. Here Julius Cæsar is believed to have landed on his first invasion of Britain.

Deptford.—parl. bor., consisting of the par. of Deptford St. Paul, on Ravensbourne rivulet and river Thames, co. London, with ry. sta., SE. & C. R., 3 miles SE. of London Bridge by rail and immediately W. of Greenwich—parl. bor., 1575 ac., pop. 110,122; met. bor. and par., 1563 ac., pop. 110,398. Deptford has engineering works, some mfrs. of earthenware, soap, and chemicals, and, in the neighbourhood, excellent market gardens. The old naval dockyard was filled up in 1869, and converted into a foreign cattle-market, which belongs to the City Corporation. The royal victualling-yard, the most important in the kingdom, is still maintained; here cattle are slaughtered and biscuits and other provisions are stored for the navy; the workshops are extensive and varied and include a very large cooperage. The gas used on the premises is manufactured within the yard. The London Electric Supply Company has its headquarters here. The corporation of Trinity House has at D. an hospital for master mariners. Of Sayes Court, which figures in Scott's "Kenilworth," belonged to Evelyn, and was the residence of Peter the Great while he was studying shipbuilding at D., only the garden, now used as a recreation ground, remains. Captain Cook's ships, the Resolution and the Discovery, sailed from here. D. returns 1 member to Parl.; it was made a parl. bor. in 1885.—2. Deptford, eccl. dist., Bishop Wearmouth par., N. Derby,—cap. of co., parl. and co. bor., and market town, with ry. stas. (Mid., Main, and Nottingham Rd.), M. R. (Friargate), G. N. R., Derbyshire, on river Derwent, 42¼ miles NE. of Birmingham, 60 SE. of Manchester, and 129 NW. of London by rail; parl. bor., co. bor., and par., 5272 ac., pop. 114,848. The boundaries of the bor. were extended in 1901. Market days, Tuesday and Friday. D. occupies a position nearly in the middle of England. It is the centre of the Midland Ry. system, containing its head offices and principal workshops, which cover 400 ac. of ground and give employment to over 10,000 men; there are extensive locomotive, carriage, and waggon works. It has a grammar-school, founded 1160, schools of science and art, and a town and county infirmary; it also possesses free public swimming baths, a free library, and museum buildings, all presented by Mr. M. T. Bass (1799–1884), who represented Derby in Parliament for 35 years. Other public buildings are the Town Hall, Corporation Art Gallery, and the Central School of Art. The register of St. Werburgh's Church contains the entry of Dr. Johnson's marriage in 1735. The Arboretum is a well laid out park of 22 ac.; there are also four recreation grounds. D. has silk mills—the first silk-mill in England was erected at D. in 1717—elastic web-works, sparworks, and ironworks, and it has been long celebrated for the Crown Derby porcelain; lace is also made. D. is a place of great antiquity. It was the most southern town occupied by the Highlanders in 1745. It gives the title of earl to the Stanley family. Richardson (1689–1761), author of "Clarissa Harlowe," and Herbert Spencer were natives. The bor. returns 2 members to Parliament.—2. Derby, hamlet, N. Lincolnshire, 9½ miles NW. of Brigg.

Derbyshire, midland co. of England, having Yorkshire on the N., Notts on the E., Leicestershire, Warwickshire, and Staffordshire on the S., and Staffordshire and Cheshire on the W.; length, N. and S., 52 miles; greatest breadth, 35 miles; average breadth, 20 miles; area, admin. co. (including the co. bor. of Derby), 652,272 ac., pop. 610,522. The surface in the S. is either flat or undulating, irregular in the middle and NE., and picturesquely mountainous in the NW. or Peak district, which is the S. end of the Pennine chain. The principal rivers are the Trent (navigable throughout the co.), Derwent, Dove, and Wye; river communication is supplemented by the Erewash and Grand Trunk Canals. The road and railway systems are highly developed. The co. is served by the M. R. (principal system), G. C. R., G. N. R., L. D. & E. C. R., L. & NW. R., and N. S. R. The soil in the Vale of the Trent is alluvial and very productive. In the hilly districts the land is mostly in pasture; much of it is rocky and unproductive. Oats, barley, potatoes, and wheat are cultivated; and there are many excellent dairy-farms. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Warm mineral springs are numerous, the most popular being those at Buxton, Matlock, and Bakewell. Coal is abundant; iron ore and lead are worked; among the other mineral products are zinc, manganese, and barytes. There are numerous and extensive quarries of limestone and marble; fluor-spar is found in the caverns, and is manufactured into a great variety of ornamental articles. Papermaking, silk, cotton, and lace are mfrs.; malting and brewing are also carried on, and there are some extensive iron foundries. The co. comprises 313 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Derby (2 members), and the mun. bors. of Chesterfield, Glossop, and Ilkestone. It is mostly in the diocese of Southwell. In the S. of the co. considerable alterations have been effected by the Boundary Commissioners. For parl. purposes it is divided into 7 divisions, viz., High Peak, North-Eastern, Chesterfield, Western, Mid, Ilkestone, and Southern, 1 member for each division.

Donegal.—maritime co., Ulster Province, Ireland; is bounded W. and N. by the Atlantic Ocean, E. by cos. Londonderry and Tyrone, and S. by cos. Fermanagh and Leitrim and Donegal Bay; greatest length, NE. and SW., 84 m.; greatest breadth, NW. and SE., 41 m.; average breadth, 28 m.; coast-line, about 166 m.; area, 1,197,153 ac. land, 5.7 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 173,722, of whom 135,029 or 77.7 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 19,908 or 11.5 Episcopalians, 16,212 or 9.3 Presbyterians, and 1828 or 1.1 Methodists. The coast is bold and rugged, and is penetrated with several far-reaching indentations. The chief inlets are Loughs Foyle and Swilly, which are separated by the Inishowen peninsula, Mulroy Bay, Sheep Haven, Gweebarra and Donegal bays; the boldest headlands are Malin, Bloody Foreland, and Malinmore; and of numerous islands the largest are Aran, Tory, and Gola Islands. The surface is mostly barren and mountainous. Mount Errigal, the loftiest summit, is 2460 ft. high. There are numerous bogs and lakes, the largest lake being Lough Derg, in the SE. The mountain streams are small but numerous, and their estuaries abound in salmon and other fish. The river Foyle forms a part of the E. border, and the Erne flows about 10 m. through the SE. corner before entering the sea. Mica slate and granite are the prevailing rocks; limestone and marble are abundant. Agriculture forms the main industry of the co.; oats, flax, and potatoes are the prevailing crops. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The inhabitants of the coast and islands are chiefly employed in the fisheries and in the making of kelp from seaweed. The mfr. of linen, woollens, and muslin is carried on in a few of the principal towns. The co. comprises 51 pars., and the towns of Ballyshannon and Letterkenny. For parl. purposes it is divided into 4 divisions, viz., North, West, East, and South, 1 member for each division; the representation was increased 2 members in 1885. Harbour works have been carried out at various places on the coast in order to promote and encourage the fisheries. Light railways have also been constructed to relieve the congested districts: the principal lines are from Londonderry to Stranorlar, Letterkenny, and Carndonagh, from Stranorlar to Killybegs, and from Stranorlar to Glenties, from Letterkenny to Burtonport.—2. Donegal ("Fort of Foreigners"), capital of co., seaport, and par., with ry. sta., Donegal Ry., at mouth of river Eask, on Donegal Bay, 18 miles SW. of Stranorlar, and 46½ SW. of Londonderry—par., 22,791 ac., pop. 3690; town, pop. 1214; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. Grain, butter, and eggs are exported. Vessels of 300 tons can discharge their cargoes at the quay, but it is not a port of any consequence owing to the number of shoals and the difficulty of approach. There are interesting ruins of a castle and a monastery. A spa in the neighbourhood is frequented for its waters, which contain sulphur and iron.

Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. D. is the terminus of the SE. & C. R. system, and is also a port for the mail and packet service to the Continent, Calais being distant 22 miles, and Ostend 68 miles. On the Continental service its trade chiefly depends; but it has shipbuilding, rope and sailmaking, fisheries, and coast traffic, besides the supply of ships' stores. Eggs and general agricultural produce are largely imported from France. At the extremity of the Admiralty Pier is a flashing light visible 10 miles, also a light-vessel marking extremity of the Pier works, with flash light visible 10 miles. There is a fixed light at the end of the North Pier visible 3 miles, and a flash light at the outer end of the Prince of Wales Pier visible 12 miles. The situation and climate render Dover an attractive seaside place and winter resort for invalids. The Promenade Pier with pavilion was opened in 1893. The harbour has been greatly improved in recent years and consists of two docks and a tidal basin. The continental mail-boats depart from the Admiralty Pier on the W. side of the docks. The boat trains run on to the Admiralty Pier. This pier, 600 ft. long, forms one side of a projected national harbour of refuge which is now under construction. It will have a low water area of 610 ac., will take the largest vessels, and is estimated to cost £3,750,000. The Dover Harbour Board are also constructing a graving dock, commercial harbour, and a water station, where continental passengers will be enabled to join their trains under cover. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) As the nearest landing-place from the continent, D. has from the earliest times been a place of considerable importance; it contains Dover Castle, situated on the NE. side, on a chalk cliff nearly 350 ft. high, which is still maintained as a fortress, and has underground works, a bomb-proof magazine, and barracks to accommodate 2000 men. Here also are several other forts and large barracks. The Maison Dieu Hall, built by Hubert de Burgh in the first half of the 13th century, has been restored, and now forms a portion of the Town Hall. Other buildings of interest are the Museum, Free Library, National Sailors' Home and Refuge, and the Gordon Boys' Orphanage (1884). The Connaught Public Park on the N. side of the town has an area of 22½ acres. Within its walls are the Roman pharos, the Romano-British fortress church, some remains of the Saxon fort, and the Norman keep. Dover returns 1 member to Parliament.
